Hi, guys. Welcome back to our video series. In this short video, we are going to talk a little bit about opening your first Amazon seller central account. I will cover the most common questions that you might have when opening your Amazon seller central account to do your Amazon white labeling business.

Here's a preview of what you're about to discover:

- How to get started; I'll carefully GUIDE YOU through the process
- Where to SELL your Stuff; Find out how to pick the right location
- The Advantages and Disadvantages of selling in the U.S. Or EUROPE; so CHOOSE Wisely!
- Some KEY FAQ's by newcomers; I'll ANSWER them all with GREAT examples!
- Professional Account VS Free Account; Guys, sometimes the best things in life aren't FREE

First of all, you need to decide where you're going to sell your stuff. It can be either United States marketplace, which also may include Canada and Mexico, or it can be Europe, which includes the top five countries joined together for the global European marketplace. You will get completely two different seller central accounts, which are not linked in any way. In each account, you will need to set everything, all the products, so I highly suggest that you decide first where you're going to sell before you start selling.

The obvious decision is not about where you live; it completely irrelevant where you live. You can be living in Europe and you can start your Amazon United States business or vice versa. The question is how competitive your market is and how competitive your niche is. United States marketplace is very crowded and very competitive. However, you have high volumes of sales if you are going to get on top. While European markets are smaller and very niche, so you won't have a lot of sales, but at the same time, you won't have a lot of competition.

You can translate your listings to different languages and target special markets like Germany, France, Spain, or United Kingdom. It's very important that you decide where you're going to sell before you start selling. Like the things that Germans like might be different from things Americans like to buy. Let's assume you're going to sell in the United States, and right now I open Amazon seller central registration page, which you can just Google and find. Here, you can see you can start selling and open your account.

You can either open a free account without any monthly fees, or you can open a professional account, which is only $39.99, but it gives you access to Amazon FBA program. I highly recommend that you start with your professional account. Once you're ready, you can click "start selling" and get your registration up. Here are the most common questions that you might have. "Do you need to live in the United States to have an account in United States Amazon?" No, you don't. You can be living in Europe, you can be having a European bank account, you can be having a European company, and you can still sell on Amazon in the United States.

For example, I personally don't have an American company or an American bank account and I am still selling on Amazon just fine, so let this not stop you. However, what do you need to have? You need to have a European company if you're selling from a company name, also you need to have a European bank account, and most important, you must have a credit card which is active and which is tied and connected to your account. Also, of course, you need to have a phone number, and it can be a European phone number, it doesn't matter, not American.

You don't need to worry about having an American company, having an American bank account; you can use your European account. If you live outside of Europe, you might need to contact Amazon support directly to ask if your country is eligible for Amazon. I know a lot of Chinese sellers on Amazon so you don't really need to be from Europe or USA to sell... Now I will not waste your time showing how to register because all you need to do is just fill a few fields and put your password and your bank details and your company details and then you get activated for Amazon.

If you're going to open a European Amazon, then you just Google European seller central and you get to a page like this where you can sell on five marketplaces if you take this box. This costs you £25 per month, which is a professional account and gives you the ability to have Fulfilled By Amazon program. This way, you get access to all five Italian, German, Spanish, French, and British Amazon in Europe. This is an amazing way to combine sales in all European countries for 29 million buyers.

I highly recommend you do it in case you want to have less competition and translate your listing to different languages to maximize your local sales. That's it guys. It's really super easy and I don't need to waste your time on this. If you are ready to get started, open your Amazon seller central account and continue to our next videos.
